

2 Countries 2 Clinics 1 Ecosystem

For the past three years, the environmental clinics at the University of Washington and the University of Victoria have collaborated on cases and projects. Leveraging their resources to address environmental problems in their shared ecosystem, the two clinics have combined the different legal approaches of the two countries to create rich and unexpected opportunities for their students and faculty.

In addition, the collaboration has forged links between other programs at the two law schools. The clinics share a common goal — inspiring and training the next generation of North American environmental lawyers.
